

Survey Results – National & Florida
February 8, 2020

We conducted an online survey among n=1,274 likely 2020 voters from February 4-8, 2020. We conducted the same survey among voters nationwide and in Florida.

	National	Florida
Number of interviews	n = 655	n = 619
Margin of error	+/- 3.8 percentage points	+/- 3.9 percentage points

Respondents are representative of likely voters nationwide and in Florida on key demographic variables including age, gender, ethnicity and education

After a series of screen questions (e.g. likelihood to vote), likely voters viewed a sample ballot.

Voters Want the National Choice Option to Make It More Likely the NPV Winner Becomes President

Some people want the person who wins the national popular vote to become president. One way to make that likely is to be able to cast your vote as you normally would and then choose, if you select this option, to have the national vote winner counted as your choice for president in your state. Do you want to have that choice on the ballot?

	Party			Ethnicity			Gender		Age
	D	I	R	White	Hisp	AfAm	M	W	18-29	30-44	45-64	65+

Voters Want the National Choice Option on the Ballot

Suppose your ballot stated, "Do you want the candidate who receives the most votes in the nation to become the president. If you do fill in the oval next to yes: yes/no" You might choose yes or no, but would you be in favor of having this national vote option on the ballot in your state?

Voters Say the National Choice Ballot Is Understandable

Do you believe this ballot is understandable? Does it communicate adequately that by checking yes a voter will ask his state officials to count his/her vote for president along with all other votes in the nation, and then if the voter's preference lost the national popular vote, the state will count the vote for the purpose of choosing electors as a vote for the national popular vote winner?
